about the conference

Has Christian Bioethics Made a Difference?

Can bioethics be Christian?

The time has come to address these tough questions.

Originally conversant with Christian moral reflection, bioethics has emigrated from bedside consultations to interdisciplinary research, public policy debates, and wider cultural and social conversations that all privilege secular discourse. The Scandal of Bioethics glances backward to ask questions about the legacy of Christian thought in bioethics, while facing the future, the purpose, and the place of Christian thought in bioethics.

Join us for The Center for Bioethics & Human Dignity's 18th Annual Summer Conference, The Scandal of Bioethics. Take this opportunity to reengage the pressing bioethical issues of our day from distinctly Christian perspectives.

This conference will also address:

- the noble pursuit of medicine
- emerging issues in biolaw
- trends in clinical ethics
- practical end-of-life guidance for the pulpit and the pew
- a vision of biotechnology that affirms both human dignity and human flourishing

Course Descriptions

○ Intensive Bioethics Institute | July 11-14

A survey of the field of bioethics, introducing competing ways of addressing biological issues in historical, philosophical, and theological perspective. An international team of several top Christian bioethicists address special areas of expertise.

Directed by Paige C. Cunningham, JD

Guest lectures given by: Dónal O'Mathúna, PhD; Michael J. Sleasman, PhD; John Kilner, PhD; Robert Orr, MD; Beth Felker Jones, PhD; Mailee Smith, JD; and Ed Grant, JD.

○ Advanced Bioethics Institute | July 11-14

A methodological investigation of how to do bioethics with a range of approaches critically assessed from a biblical-theological perspective. An international team of several top Christian bioethicists address special areas of expertise.

Directed by Michael J. Sleasman, PhD

Guest lectures given by: David Fletcher, PhD; Dónal O'Mathúna, PhD; Kathy Waller, PhD; Beth Felker Jones, PhD; Mailee Smith, JD; and Ed Grant, JD.

○ Emerging Issues in Reproductive Technology and Women's Health Institute | July 11-14

This course will provide a detailed analysis of the current frontiers of beginning of life issues in a national and international context. Topics will include current clashes over rights of conscience in healthcare, maternal mortality and MDG5, the meaning of "unsafe" abortion, the challenges of beginning of life technology, the role of recent medical research in shaping policy decisions, and more. Jennifer Lahl will address "Eggsploitation" and the use of donor gametes and their implications in reality.

Directed by Donna Harrison, MD; Co-taught with Jennifer Lahl, RN, MA

○ Pre-Med/Undergraduate Bioethics Institute | July 13-14

This course provides an orientation to bioethics with special interest for those considering careers in medicine or healthcare. Topics include: healthcare practice, economics, clinical ethics, stem cell research, cloning, other emerging biotechnologies, abortion, assisted procreation, and end-of-life decision-making.

Directed by Joyce Shelton, PhD

Bioethics National Conference Course | July 14-16

This course provides an additional academic perspective on the conference. It includes additional class meetings in conjunction with the conference, but most of the content will be the conference itself. Readings prior to the conference and assignments following will be required. It is only offered for academic credit. This course may also be taken for undergraduate credit.

Directed by Hans Madueme, MD, PhD (Cand) or Ferdinand D. Yates, Jr., MD

Engaging Bioethics in the Church Seminar | July 18-20

Many Christians think of bioethics as a subject reserved for healthcare professionals, academic philosophers, and policy makers, but not those in the pulpit and pews. Christian faithfulness, however, demands that every believer seriously consider the implications of the Christian faith for health-related decisions each of us will face at some point either for ourselves or on behalf of those we love. Ideally, the time for such reflection is prior to the moment of crisis. This course, designed for pastors and laity, will explore bioethical engagement as one expression of the church's mission to make disciples of the Lord Jesus. Participants will investigate the implications of Christian doctrines for a variety of commonly faced bioethical issues and learn what churches can do to better equip their people to think through the ethical implications of health-related issues from a distinctively Christian perspective.

Directed by Keith Plummer, PhD

Justice and Global Medicine Seminar | July 18-20

According to the World Health Organization, one-quarter to one-third of deaths around the world each year are due to malnutrition, dirty water, and infectious diseases. As healthcare costs in the United States skyrocket, and millions remain without healthcare insurance, the issue of justice and access to healthcare have become critical questions for our society. Further, justice concerns are involved in all aspects of care at the bedside: fidelity to patient vs dual agency, discrimination in access to various goods and services, triage and allocation of scarce resources such as organs, duties of healthcare workers in situations of personal risk, the definition of disease and medicalization, setting priorities in medical research, questions of "futile" or inappropriate medical interventions, rights of conscience of healthcare workers, etc. This course seeks to review philosophical and biblical/theological approaches to the questions of justice, and address these multiple concerns through their lenses.

Directed by C. Christopher Hook, MD; Co-taught with Claretta Y. Dupree, PhD
